7. A Creepy Experience

She woke up! Something had awakened her suddenly. In her semi-conscious state she was not yet sure what that 'something' was. Earlier in the day she had gone to the beach for a cool, refreshing swim in the cold surf. The holiday season had ended and she had her beach back. It was always deserted once the holiday makers had left.

After her swim she had settled down in a quiet, secluded spot, protected by sand dunes, to read her paperback. She had fallen asleep in the hot, afternoon sun.

Now her body had become rigid — she dared not move a muscle! As she lay on the sand, flat on her back, looking up into the late afternoon sun, her body began to sweat and shiver slightly.

Something was crawling over her bare leg, just below her right knee. What was it, and what should she do? The animal was heading for her hips, and was tickling her with its prickly movements. Feeling around for her book, she located it close to her head. Grabbing it tightly, and remaining calm she moved her hand in the direction of the offending creature.

It was just about to crawl inside the edge of her swimmers, when she deftly flicked the thing clean off her body to land in the sand several metres away. She hadn't dared look at the thing — she had relied solely on her judgement.

As she sprang up to view her prey, she found herself looking at the largest spider she had ever seen in her life, scuttling away to the safety of the dunes. She shivered violently!!!
